A. INTRODUCTION

I am a tenured full Professor of Psychology at Florida International University (FIU) with research expertise in sexual violence, including digital sexual abuse and image-based sexual abuse. I am also an expert on the topics of discrimination, prejudice, and harassment at the intersection of gender, race, and other dimensions of social identity. I was retained by Daniel Szalkiewicz, Esq. to provide expert witness services in the case of S.S. vs. Dezarae Collins, being tried in the United States District Court, District of New Jersey.

I was asked to prepare this report to determine whether S.S. was a victim of image-based sexual abuse (IBSA), to provide background on the social and psychological nature of IBSA, to assess the extent to which S.S.’s personal experience with having his images shared matches the empirical evidence on the harms of IBSA, and to discuss how gender role norms can affect victim’s experiences with sexual abuse. In the pages that follow, I discuss research on IBSA, including correlates of victimization and motives for perpetration, followed by my analysis of a semi-structured, one-on-one interview with S.S. about his experience of having his images shared, including his life before and after those incidents. As an expert in social identity and social prejudice, I also discuss the experience of masculine gender role norms in male sexual violence victimization, including S.S.’ specific experience of victimization. In all matters, the information and analysis I provide is based in the social science literature on IBSA, on my expertise as the foremost psychological researcher of IBSA in the U.S. and Head of Research for the nonprofit Cyber Civil Rights Initiative, and as an internationally-recognized expert in identity-based discrimination and harassment.

B. BACKGROUND INFORMATION ON IMAGE-BASED SEXUAL ABUSE

1. Image-based sexual abuse is a form of sexual violence. Colloquially known as “revenge porn,” image-based sexual abuse is defined as the sharing (or threatening to share) of sexual or nude images or videos of another person without their consent, excluding commercially produced pornography.<sup>1</sup> Prior studies of the nonconsensual distribution of intimate images (previously known as “nonconsensual porn” in academic circles) have found that perpetrators may be distributing intimate images for profit, as attention-seeking behavior, or as a deliberately hostile act.<sup>2</sup> This may include the actual distribution of nude or sexual images and videos (the nonconsensual distribution of intimate images, referred to as “NDII”), taking intimate images of the victim without their knowledge or consent (aka “upskirting” or “downblousing”), and the recording of sexual violence that is shared via text or online (aka “recorded sexual assault”). Another form of IBSA is sextortion, which occurs when the perpetrator uses the nude or intimate images or videos in an attempt to extort the victim for money, services, sexual favors, a new or continued relationship, and more.<sup>3</sup> IBSA also includes sexual images or videos created using artificial intelligence-based human synthesis technology, or sexualized “deepfakes.”<sup>4</sup> Regardless of the specific form it takes, IBSA is considered a traumatic<sup>5,6</sup> and gendered<sup>7,8</sup> form of technology-facilitated sexual abuse. At present, 48 U.S. states, DC, and two territories now have laws criminalizing IBSA,<sup>9</sup> including New Jersey.

2. The perpetration of IBSA is prevalent. In my peer-reviewed, published study of 3,044 online U.S. adults (54% women), 1 in 12 (8%) reported having been victims of nonconsensual distribution of intimate images (NDII) at some point in their lives, and 1 in 20 (5%) reported having perpetrated NDII<sup>10</sup> When examining individuals who had ever been threatened or victimized with NDII, that number was even higher, at 1 in 8 (12.8%). This is consistent with research published in Australia, which found that nearly 1 in 10 Australians had a sexual or nude image of themselves distributed without consent.<sup>11</sup> As predicted based on sexual scripts, which describe norms for sexual interactions, and sexual double standards, which give men greater freedom to express their sexuality, women in our study reported higher rates of victimization by NDII (9.21%) than men (6.61%), and significantly lower rates of perpetration (3.29%) than men (7.26%). This is consistent with research in the U.K. which finds that women are more often victimized by NDII than men.<sup>12</sup>

3. There are a variety of motivations behind IBSA perpetration. Motivations for IBSA perpetration are vast. Of the 159 individuals in our U.S. study who reported having perpetrated NDII in our study (5.2% of the entire sample), the most commonly chosen reason for perpetration was just to share “with friends” without the intention “to hurt” the person.<sup>13</sup> Additional evidence reveals it is also common for a person’s sext to be distributed without consent as a form of punishment or control by a partner or ex-partner. Indeed, published research examined the extent to which NDII in current or former intimate partner relationships was perpetrated as a form of abuse using a content analysis of 5 years of U.S. news stories on NDII.<sup>14</sup> This analysis established that NDII has been perpetrated using all eight of the abuse metatactics in the Power and Control Wheel, with the three most common being emotional abuse, coercion and threats, and denial/blame/minimization. Treating NDII in relationships as a form of intimate partner violence provides a basis on which to understand the etiology, manifestation, motives, and impact of this form of abuse.

4. Regardless of the motivation, IBSA generally has a traumatic effect on its victims. IBSA, including NDII, is widely understood to be traumatic for victims.<sup>15</sup> Those who have been victimized by NDII have worse mental and physical health than non-victims,<sup>16</sup> and report PTSD symptomology.<sup>17</sup> Recent research drawing on data from 75 interviews with IBSA victims finds that they experience social rupture, constancy (i.e., “a level of permanence which affects everything”), existential threat, isolation, and constrained liberty.<sup>18</sup> While women are more often victims of NDII, the harm done to men victims is especially likely to be minimized and denied by the victim’s social circle, health providers, and law enforcement.<sup>19</sup>

5. IBSA can cause substantial harm to the victim even if it is not widely disseminated or disseminated to known others. Having IBSA disseminated directly to a victim’s employer or place of work, family and friends, school, and other personal social circles has caused individuals to leave or be dismissed from their jobs, and to permanently lose close relationships.<sup>20</sup> Having IBSA disseminated to large numbers of strangers has caused individuals to change their names and residences.<sup>21</sup> However, even dissemination that is not as wide or personal can be devastating to victims because of the threat that these images may still be disseminated to these viewers. Specifically, the threat of the abuse re-emerging causes constant apprehension across time and space for victims.<sup>22</sup> As one victim reported “[It’s] having this continuing threat that the images could be re-shared, or re-emerge online, that new people could see these intimate images. . . . And I think it’s the unknowing; that not knowing aspect that you have to deal with every day.”<sup>23</sup> This causes victims to be hyper-vigilant in online and offline interactions, overanalyzing social interactions, checking the internet and their social media obsessively, etc.

6. Sexual violence against men can involve minimization and denial of harms that has a compounding effect on the trauma of victimization. Sexual violence such as IBSA is often wielded as a tool of power and reinforced by traditional gender roles. As such, it impacts people of all genders- not just women and girls. Prevailing heteronormative standards, however, have led to a significant gap in our understanding of men’s experiences of IBSA victimization. Early research (including work under review by the author of this report) finds that men’s experiences with IBSA victimization are especially likely to be minimized and denied<sup>24</sup> because they are expected to be immune to sexual violence due to the stereotype that they are strong, dominant, and invulnerable.<sup>25</sup> Men IBSA survivors’ stories illustrate how gendered narratives minimized victimization experiences that deviated from stereotypical views of sexual violence, making it harder for them to speak out and get support. This is consistent with research on other forms of sexual violence against men, such as rape and sexual coercion.<sup>26,27</sup>

C. METHODOLOGY

On October 14, 2024, I conducted a one-on-one interview with S.S. to more deeply understand his functioning before and after the incidents of NDII. Non-leading, semi-structured questions for the interview were developed using (a) interview materials from McGlynn and colleagues<sup>28</sup> (b) best practices in qualitative interviewing on sensitive and traumatic topics,<sup>29,30</sup> and (c) my own expertise on the nature and consequences of image-based sexual abuse for victims.

After the interview, I compared the data from the present case with the social science literature on IBSA cited in this report. I have previously analyzed, written about, and presented copiously on the issue of IBSA, including NDII. In my review, I assumed that the facts alleged in the complaint were true, and that the deposition testimony I read was true and accurate. My analysis of the documents in the case, preparing and conducting the interview, and writing the present summary took me a total of 6 hours.

D. DOCUMENTS REVIEWED

In connection with this report, I reviewed and relied on the following documents in no particular order:

1. Interview between Plaintiff and Dr. Eaton
2. Report of Judyann McCarthy Counseling Services, LLC, dated October 8, 2024

E. BACKGROUND INFORMATION ON CASE

1. S.S. pre-victimization

The first portion of the interview I conducted focused on S.S.’s life before becoming a victim of IBSA. In particular, I focused on the year before S.S. learned his intimate images had been mailed to his home address (i.e., the first time he was victimized by IBSA). S.S. described his time in 2019 as being “highly social”; he was “playing a lot of dungeons and dragons with friends.” He had just gotten divorced from his ex-wife and was “going out, having fun, didn’t have too many worries.” He specifically noted that he could “hang out with my friends and family and be present the whole time.”

S.S. described his mental state in 2019 as positive. He was not seeing a therapist, and was finding purpose in his job as a service manager of an HVAC cleaning company. “I enjoyed it, I enjoyed the responsibility.” He said he rose in management quickly and enjoyed training people. He also noted that his “physical health in 2019 was perfect. I don’t think I was even sick once.” He explained that he was naturally a fast-paced guy at the time, and that his exercise was work, “sweating around crawling in attics.”

2. Learning of the images

In 2020, upon finding out that his intimate image was mailed to his family home, S.S.’s social, mental, and physical health began to deteriorate. He described embarrassment upon having to report the image to law enforcement, and further stress when the police said “they can’t do anything” because the mailing “had no return address, was not signed, and did not contain demands.” However, he knew exactly who the image was from, as he knew (a) who he originally sent the image to, (b) whose stationary it was on, and (c) that it was stamped as being sent from the defendant’s residence in Portland Oregon. “That was the second time I applied for a restraining order” he noted. His first attempt at getting a restraining order against the defendant was years earlier, in 2015. “In 2015 she was calling my chain of command at the Marine Corps and I applied then. She was harassing me day in and day out, making new phone numbers, harassing my mom and sister, my older brother, she would call me all hours of the night. I wasn’t getting any sleep. I tried to hang myself in the bathroom and the belt broke, and my buddy came and said I’m going to get you a lawyer and a restraining order.” Unfortunately, S.S.’s second attempt to secure a restraining order in light of his IBSA victimization also failed.

In 2022, S.S. was again victimized by IBSA at the hands of the defendant, this time through digital dissemination to every significant person in his social circle. The defendant started sending NDII, including videos and photos, to S.S.'s family members, his wife's family, and his friends. The breadth of these NDII attacks, and their consistency, is among the most severe the author of this report has heard of. She "made Craig's List ads with my birthday, a picture of me with my face, my whole body and penis out, cropped on top was "missing narcissist," with my military ID number and old phone number... She made a Facebook account of me, without nude photos. Then an Instagram account with nude photos. After that she was sending friend requests to people." This went on for months.

3. Conduct post-loss

Following his awareness of the image-based abuse, S.S.'s life "fell apart" and remains fragmented to this day. First, his social life changed dramatically. "There are so many people I avoid hanging out with. They can't look at me the same. I can't go to most parties if it's a family event for the same reason. My sister- I can hardly ever see her. I don't hang out with my parents anymore. Eventually the conversation always creeps its way back to the abuse. Sometimes my mom still gets calls or texts- but we can't prove it or enforce it because its across state lines. I can't look my sister in the eyes anymore. I have to not think about it for weeks before we hang out." S. S. had to leave multiple Dungeons and Dragons groups "because the group I was playing with all got images of me so I had to leave the group so I didn't have to have those conversations anymore. We played the same game every Sunday for 5 years and I had to cut it off because it was awkward." Moreover, S.S. states "I didn't just isolate then-I'm isolated now. I have only three friends from 'before'- my best friend since middle school, my best friend in the marine corps, and one of my best friends from high school. I had tons of friends- we were a giant group and we were all friends. I can't talk to any of them anymore."

S.S. also reported that his work life changed for the worse. "I was working at a cell phone tower company and some of the guys would joke about it. They didn't understand the situation. I could have buried my head, but there were a couple times where if I tried to hang out with them it would eventually revolve back around to her... They would comment they "can never get a hold of Steve because he's turning off his phone because he's driving women crazy." This last comment speaks to the harms that S.S. suffered as a result of being a male victim of sexual abuse. Not only was his harassment minimized by the legal system, where he was repeatedly denied his petitions for restraining orders, but his colleagues framed his abuse as a supposed demonstration of his sexual prowess and dominance, rather than as violence against him.

As a result of repeated harassment and abuse, S.S. has also had to leave the online sphere, where so much social, educational, and business opportunity now takes place. He stated that he does not have a real Facebook account anymore "because if she finds me again then any friends that I have will get the image." He doesn't have a "real email", doesn't have Instagram or Snapchat, and his phone number "is from a small town in Montana." Beyond worrying about his own abuse, he is also tortured by the possibility of his (now) small network of loved ones becoming targets of the defendant's abuse. Having to flee the online sphere is a common consequence of IBSA,<sup>31</sup> and severely restricts a person's civil liberties.

Finally, S.S. has had to undergo treatment by mental health professionals to cope with his IBSA victimization and the related forms of intimate violence from the defendant. In fact, he has had two therapists- each to help him with different parts of the stress. The first one supported him when all of the images were “at their worst.” At that time he reported being “angry pretty much all of the time” and having trouble eating, sleeping, and concentrating. His current therapist is helping him through complex trauma of the long-term repercussions of IBSA, including the ways it continues to affect his current marriage. As S.S. explained, “the only fights we [he and his wife] ever actually had were about it [the IBSA].”

F. OPINIONS

1. The facts of this case demonstrate that S.S. is a victim of IBSA.

As stated repeatedly by S.S. he did not consent to have his images distributed outside the context of his intimate relationship with the defendant. He did not consent voluntarily to their distribution, violating the basic psychological principles of consent.<sup>32</sup> Sexual consent is defined as “an affirmative agreement...an enthusiastic, clearly communicated and ongoing yes. One can't rely on past sexual interactions, and should never assume consent”.<sup>33</sup> Modern scientific understandings of sexual consent also describe it highly contextual (e.g., bound and defined by time, parties involved, nature of action, etc.).<sup>34</sup> As stated by RAINN, the largest anti-sexual violence organization in the U.S., “consenting to one activity, one time, does not mean someone gives consent for other activities or for the same activity on other occasions.”<sup>35</sup> In the case of S.S., this means that even his consenting to have specific intimate images distributed to specific parties at a specific time in the past does not indicate his consent for additional or further distribution of intimate images.

While popular press often highlights and portrays NDII as occurring between intimate partners for the purpose of revenge (aka “revenge porn”),<sup>36</sup> it has been and can be perpetrated by family members, strangers, friends, coworkers, acquaintances, and others,<sup>37</sup> for a wide variety of reasons, from upvotes and likes to personal sexual gratification.<sup>38,39</sup> The defining feature of NDII is not the relationship between victims, the means of dissemination, the number or nature of images, or the motivations for perpetration— all of which can vary widely.<sup>40</sup> Instead, the defining feature is the lack of consent for distribution of intimate images on the part of the victim depicted.<sup>41</sup> In this case, S.S. did not consent to have his intimate images distributed. As such, his case meets the standards for classification as image-based sexual abuse without reservation.

2. The facts of this case are consistent with research demonstrating lasting, recurring, and severe harms of IBSA for victims.

The summary that follows is my specific analysis of the exhibits and petitions in the case of S.S. vs. the defendant as a psychological scientist with expertise in digital sexual communications and abuse, including image-based sexual abuse.<sup>42</sup> The consequences of IBSA have been found to have devastating, recurring, and lifelong for victims. IBSA can be emotionally, socially, economically, and physically traumatic for victims.<sup>43,44</sup> Although not causal proof, IBSA victims have worse mental and physical health than nonvictims,<sup>45</sup> and report post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) symptomology.<sup>46</sup> Victims also report feeling distant and cut off from others as a result of their victimization.<sup>47</sup> Recent qualitative, phenomenological, research with 75 victims finds that harms of image-based sexual abuse go beyond medicalized descriptions and understandings to affect victims in ways that holistically change their functioning and identities.<sup>48</sup> Specifically, victims report experiencing social rupture, constancy, existential threat, isolation, and constrained liberty. In my interview with S.S. he spontaneously articulated 4 of these 5 themes in his experience through open-ended, non-leading questions about his life before and after the victimization.

a. Social Rupture. Social rupture involves the radical alteration of one's social life and identity, including across public and private, digital and non-digital, and personal and professional realms. Victims describe the experience as embodied and interlocking, related to physical well-being and appearance as well as to their intersecting forms of identity- gender, race, age, etc. Victims report feeling of disgust, degradation, contamination, and shame that affects the nature of their socialization with others and views of themselves. S.S. described social rupture in that his world beliefs shifted as the result of his abuse; he came to understand the world as more dangerous- both for himself and those associated with him.

b. Constancy. Constancy can be described as the inability for victims to escape their abuse, which is highly prevalent within the context of image-based sexual violence. It is ever present, all the time. The uncontrollable fluidity of digital spaces renders it impossible for victims to ever fully remove images of themselves from virtual platforms. This pervasive unmanageability makes possible for repeat offenses of image-based sexual abuse, thereby subjecting survivors to endless reoccurrences of injustice. The constant threat of victims' photos being (re)discovered and (re)distributed corners survivors into a state of constant fear, anxiety, and distress, and can require lifelong treatment as revictimization occurs. In many cases, the endless repeatability of abuse plagues victims with residual physiological and emotional detriments. S.S. explained that he has had to undergo repeated and ongoing psychological treatment to deal with prolonged and complex trauma from the IBSA victimization, and that he "can't take my mind off of the fact that I'm sitting in front of someone who has seen me masturbating. I hate knowing that certain people in my life had that. If it was acquaintances or strangers I could just drop them from my life, but this was my father, my sister, my aunts, my uncles, my best friends, my wife's family, my mother."

c. Constrained Liberty. Constrained liberty ensues in response to victims' inability to escape the ubiquitous threat of persistent sexual violence. The constant possibility of recurring abuse can lead victims to lose confidence in their overall safety. The jeopardy victims endure is exacerbated by a culture that provides little protection to victims of sexual violence. Such lingering, unavoidable hazards of abuse encourage victims to adopt a hostile, small and restrictive view of the world. This lack of safety further threatens victim-survivors' ability to occupy space, whether that space be physical, social, or otherwise. This reduced space for action results in diminished senses of freedom, liberty and societal relevance for victims. S.S. described constrained liberty when he expressed not being able to have a genuine online presence.

d. Isolation. Victims of image-based abuse frequently experience isolation from loved ones, the online world, and society in general. Often this is due to a profound breach of trust, both in relation to the abuser and others. Many victims withdraw from their social lives and relationships to reduce the need for social vigilance, the likelihood of negative reactions from others, and the ongoing sense of distrust and potential for re-traumatization. S.S. described himself as being highly isolated due to the abuse, including having to abandon work relationships, group social events, and friends. He also stopped communicating with and visiting family members as a result of the abuse, and experienced conflict with his current wife.

3. The facts of this case are consistent with S.S. experiencing increased distress as a result of being a male victim of IBSA. S.S.'s experience as a target of sexist beliefs about sexual violence likely resulted in amplified and elongated trauma relative to not experiencing this additional form of bias.<sup>49</sup> Men are socialized to believe that they should be strong, in control, and capable of defending themselves from harm. When they are victims of sexual violence, it contradicts this deeply ingrained image of masculinity. This can lead to feelings of shame, guilt, and self-blame, as male survivors may believe they failed to "protect themselves" or live up to societal expectations of strength. Moreover, it can lead to shaming and minimization from others. S.S. explained that he believes his first restraining order against the defendant failed for exactly this reason. "The restraining order failed because the cops on a military base are barely real cops and had no idea what to do. "You're a big bad marine, why are you letting a little girl bully you like this"? They were condescending, they didn't understand the situation and would never take it seriously. I was a tanker who had been deployed letting a girl 2 years younger than me, only 5 foot tall, bully me around. It's hard to explain."

G. QUALIFICATIONS

1. As stated above, I am a tenured full Professor of Psychology at Florida International University (FIU) with research expertise in intimate partner violence, including technology-facilitated sexual abuse and IBSA. I have over 60 publications, and have published multiple empirical papers on IBSA victimization and perpetration in the U.S. For my contributions to psychology, I have received several national awards, including (in the last 5 years) the Distinguished Service to SPSSI Award (2024), the SSN Media Fellowship (2023), SPW's Strickland-Daniel Mentoring Award (2022), the Emerging Leadership Award from the Committee for Women in Psychology (2019), and SPSSI's Outstanding Teaching and Mentoring Award (2019). I am also a Fellow of the American Psychological Association in Divisions 9 (SPSSI) and 35 (SPW). A copy of my Curriculum Vitae is attached to this report.
2. My expertise on IBSA has been sought after by The White House, Google, Facebook Headquarters, the Korean Ministry of Gender Equality and Family, the U.S. Marine Corps Headquarters, the International Association of Chiefs of Police, and law enforcement agencies and universities around the nation. My research on IBSA has been funded by the National Science Foundation (NSF). My research is featured in local and national news outlets (e.g., New York Times, Forbes, Science Magazine, Teen Vogue, BBC News), and I regularly serve as a guest speaker on South Florida's PBS and NPR stations.
3. Since 2016 I have served as Head of Research for Cyber Civil Rights Initiative (CCRI), which is working to understand and end the epidemic of IBSA in the U.S. My research and advocacy efforts on NCP resulted in a policy change in the state of Florida in 2019. Specifically, I worked with CCRI to successfully amend the state's cybersexual harassment law to include any and all electronic means of nonconsensual dissemination of intimate images.
